LUNA: NEW MOON

MCDONALD, Ian
'Ian McDonald's never written a bad novel, but this is a great Ian McDonald novel. When you read classic sf novels like Heinlein's The Moon is a Harsh Mistress, you can get the feeling that the author has imagined the whole world, from psychosexual relations to geopolitics, and has plucked out the telling details that let you know that this is more than a mere backdrop – it's a kind of sociological macrocosm for the lives of the characters. But McDonald has ten details for every detail proffered by other sf writers... The fashion sense of William Gibson, the design sense of Bruce Sterling, the eye for family drama of Connie Willis, the poeise of Bradbury, and the dirty sex of Kathe Koja and Samuel Delany. McDonald's moon is omniseual, kinky, violent, passionate, beautiful, awful, vibrant and crushing. As the family saga of the Cortas unravels, we meet a self-sexual ninja lawyer, a werewolf who loses his mind in the Full Earth, a family tyrant whose ruthlessness is matched only by his crepulance, and a panoply of great passions and low desires. Luna: New Moon is the first book of a two-book cycle. Now I'm all a-quiver for the next one.' – Cory Doctorow. We agree – this a stupendous return to adult SF for McDonald. Don't miss.
